Widening War

In northern Laos last week the Communists captured near the royal capital of Luang Prabang and Muong Soui.

In one of the largest operations of the Indochina war, 9,000 American and 20,000 South Vietnamese troops swept into the northwestern corner of South Vietnam. Yesterday, after days of allied pounding of enemy positions by bombers and artillery...

About 21,500 South Vietnamese troops joined by Cambodian units, thrust into the Fishhook and Parrot's Beak areas of Cambodia to strike at Communist supply and training bases.

White House Says Action Is Lawful

By Fred Farris

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—The United States declared today that the incursion into Laos was not an enlargement of the Indochina war and was "fully consistent with international law."

But several senators deplored the American-supported South Vietnamese move against Communists in Laos as an extension of the conflict and "the opening of the third front."

Peace groups announced that demonstrations against the Laos action were scheduled for Washington, New York and other American cities and college campuses.

An administration spokesman stressed that the United States would welcome a new Geneva conference to find a solution in Indochina.

The State Department, in a lengthy policy statement, emphasized that the move into Laos "will be a limited one both as to time and area."

It reaffirmed, as did the Pentagon last night, "no U.S. ground combat troops or advisers would enter Laos."

White House press secretary Ron Ziegler said the administration considers the operation to be fully consistent with international law and Article 52 of the United Nations Charter, which permits regional defense arrangements and actions.

In a brisk exchange with reporters, Mr. Ziegler said this interpretation was based on "the North Vietnamese occupation of the southern panhandle of Laos and the 'longtime aggressive actions of Hanoi in Laos.'"

To implement these programs, Russell E. Train, chairman of the President's Council on Environmental Quality, explained that 14 pieces of legislation would have to be passed.

Hearing on Refugee Yugoslav

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8 (UPI).—A Yugoslav sailor, denied entry when taken into custody by Immigration and Coast Guards, was to appear at a hearing today.

While no exact figure has been put on the programs, Mr. Nixon told Congress that they would be costly, but "we must also keep in mind the greater cost of not enacting the programs."

He said $100 million in new funds would be authorized to states in those efforts.

Charges of Former Agent Spying on Sen. Stevenson

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8 (NYT).—The Pentagon has come up with evidence that Army intelligence agents did spy on Sen. Adlai E. Stevenson in 1964.

Mr. O'Brien, however, repeated the charges in a news conference, in a sworn affidavit, and on the witness stand in a court suit brought by the American Civil Liberties Union against the Army.

TV, Radio Hit for 2 Hours Power Failure Blackens N.Y. 'In a Checkerboard Pattern'

NEW YORK, Feb. 8 (AP).—Electrical short circuits in power-generating plants last night blacked out scattered areas of Manhattan and knickerbockered television stations for the air for slightly more than two hours.

Consolidated Edison Co. said that early reports of an explosion proved unfounded. Instead, a spokesman said, transformers were tripped out of service by two successive electrical short circuits.

Proprietors of many bars and restaurants in the affected sections asked patrons to finish drinks and meals and leave the darkened establishments.

The cause of the short circuits was not reported. Con Ed said the power failure had affected "mid-Manhattan in a checkerboard fashion."

Power was restored to the Empire State Building knocked out of the metropolitan area.

Canada Jobless Level 6.9%, Highest in Industrial Nations

TORONTO, Feb. 8 (Reuters).—Unemployment in Canada has reached its highest level since 1960, the federal government's No. 1 priority.

Latest official figures show that there are 538,000 Canadians out of work in a labor force of some 7,800,000—or 6.9 percent jobless, the highest proportion in the industrialized world.

Because of the hard winter climate here, winter unemployment is generally high. Pessimists believe the unemployment figure could increase by a further 200,000 before spring.

The opposition Conservative party has concentrated most of its energies on publishing the problem. It charges Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau's Liberal government with incompetent handling of the economy in the face of inflationary pressures.

Swiss Parties See No Change Likely When Women Vote

BERN, Feb. 8 (AP).—Leaders of all major Swiss parties predicted today that yesterday's referendum, which gave women the right to vote on federal matters, will leave untouched the traditional middle-class road pattern of national politics.

Although the outcome more than doubled the number of eligible voters, party representatives agreed that the referendum result was not likely to produce any changes. Only a spokesman of the Communist party said that he expected a slight, although temporary, shift to the right.

British Mail, Ford Strikes Deadlocked 96 Schools Closed By Fuel Shortage

LONDON, Feb. 8 (AP).—For the 20th day, no mail was delivered in Britain, a wildcat walkout that has cost the Ford Motor Co. $38.4 million in lost production entered its second week today and 92,000 London schoolchildren missed classes because of a truck drivers' dispute.

Fuel oil truck drivers, who struck last month for higher pay, went back to work during the weekend. But 96 schools still had not been able to get oil delivered for their furnaces.

Criticism Leads White House to Shift Paintings

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8 (UPI).—After many critical calls, the White House said yesterday that a painting of naturalist James Audubon holding a rifle will be removed from the Green Room when the official portrait of President John F. Kennedy is permanently hung there.

Maneuvers Canceled

STOCKHOLM, Feb. 8 (UPI).—The government decided today to cancel military maneuvers involving 20,000 reservists because of the railroad strike in Sweden.

The defense ministry said that the maneuvers would put further strain on the already hard-pressed transport system.

A total of 6,500 middle and high-level government employees were on strike today to press for salary increases of 30 percent or more.

GI Family Evades Bomb in Ankara

ANKARA, Feb. 8 (AP).—The wife and two children of a U.S. Army sergeant stationed here narrowly escaped death or serious injury today in a terrorist bombing.

The bomb came in a gift-wrapped package to the home of Sgt. Billy G. Austin. His 9-year-old son noticed it on the doorstep and took it to his mother.

To Meet Again Today EEC Ministers Hint Accord Is Near on Monetary Union

BRUSSELS, Feb. 8.—The Common Market's Council of Ministers was unable to agree today on the most critical parts of the plan for economic and monetary union, but the ministers indicated following the meeting that at least they had reduced their differences.

French Finance Minister Valéry Giscard d'Estaing said following the meeting that he hoped agreement could be reached tomorrow.

Big-4 Envoys See No Gain Over Berlin

BERLIN, Feb. 8 (UPI).—The Big-Four ambassadors held the 14th meeting on Berlin today. They failed to break their deadlock on Western diplomatic sources said.

There was no breakthrough today but we think there is a prospect of an agreement in the future, a Western source said.

At the beginning of the meeting the Western ambassadors pressed the East German harassment of Berlin traffic from Jan. 27 to Feb. 1, the Western sources said.

The East Germans interfered with the traffic in retaliation for West German political activities here.

Meet in U.S. Sector The Western allied ambassadors to West Germany and the Soviet Ambassador to East Germany met for two hours and 45 minutes in the former Allied Control Authority Building in the American sector in an attempt to reach an agreement to lessen tension here.

A communiqué said that the meeting was "businesslike" and that the ambassadors would meet again on Feb. 18.

They agreed that, as usual, Big-Four experts would meet to prepare the next meeting.

In line with the four-power decision to keep details of the meeting secret, the communiqué gave no details of today's meeting.

Bonn Lifts 1-Day Airfreight Ban, Checks Cargoes

BONN, Feb. 8 (AP).—The West German government today lifted a one-day ban on air mail and airfreight but continued security checks on cargo moving in and out of the country by air.

The ban was imposed yesterday because of a terrorist threat against air traffic.

Government spokesman Conrad Ahlers, who announced the lifting of the restriction and the continued spot checks, would not give any details of the threat. But he declined to rule out the Middle East conflict as the source of the threat.

Russians Disavow Accusation Brandt Reneged on Promise

SOVIET Embassy in the Federal Republic of Germany today disavowed a statement, the communiqué said, "in connection with press reports about an interview with a Soviet diplomat by a correspondent of the Hearst newspaper group."

The embassy is instructed to declare to the Soviet diplomat or other official person, either in Washington or elsewhere, has given such an interview. The press reports (quoting the Wallach interviews) mirror only the views and aims of their authors.

German newspapers, which have made Mr. Wallach's reports and the ensuing controversy in this country their main story for the last five days, speculated that Mr. Wallach's source was either Anatoly Dobrynin, Soviet Ambassador to Washington, or his deputy.

The Wallach reports were seized upon by the Christian Democratic opposition as support for their charges that Mr. Brandt, a Social Democrat, gave the Russians more concessions when he signed a non-aggression pact with them last year than he is willing to admit now.

This afternoon the Russian Embassy in Bonn made its first comment on the matter, and it was to disown the Russians Mr. Wallach said were his source.

Disease Peril Is Combated At Tuscania

Saratog, Colombo Visit Quake Scene; Toll at 20

TUSCANIA, Italy, Feb. 8 (AP).—The Italian government urgently dispatched health experts and medicines to Tuscania today to guard against outbreaks of disease following the earthquake that ruined the historic hill town. Rescue squads extracted the bodies of a young boy and an elderly man from the rubble, bringing the death toll from Saturday night's tremors to 20. A government official estimated damage to the city's monuments, churches and museums at a minimum of half a billion lire ($800,000) and said the cost of restoring what is repairable could go much higher. President Giuseppe Saragat and Premier Indigno Colombo toured the debris-strewn medieval quarter and visited some of the 139 injured persons in hospitals. Men and women among the 4,000 homeless survivors fell on their knees begging for aid. Mr. Saragat promised the state would help them, and Mr. Colombo vowed that "regardless of cost" the authorities will repair damaged buildings and replace the destroyed ones with new structures outside the center. Damage to nonhistoric sites has been estimated at over $4 million. Health Minister Luigi Mariotti sent three health inspectors to the city along with a special team of chemists, bacteriologists and engineers to study the damaged water system and "ensure the furnishing of potable water to the population." The ministry said that the hygienic and sanitary situation was "believed under control and does not give reason, at present, for worry." But at the same time the ministry ordered the immediate dispatch of antibiotics, sulphas, gamma globulin, anti-typhus vaccine, blood plasma and other drugs for the injured. Art officials arrived from Rome to inspect the damage to Etruscan archaeological sites and artifacts and to historic buildings. The most serious damage was to famous Romanesque churches and basilicas like St. Mary Major and St. Peter's. These and other churches had undergone restoration in recent years. They drew many tourists.

UP AND AWAY—Ibis's million-dollar Insula Augusta Hotel, built in part with government funds, disappears in a puff of explosive smoke. The building's death certificate was issued by the Air Ministry, which, according to the hotel's promoters, had originally approved of the construction. However, the ministry later decided that the structure was too close to the island's airport and a hazard to planes.

Arrested in Reggio Calabria

Neo-Fascist Aide, Shipowner Among 5 Held in Italian Riots
REGGIO CALABRIA, Italy, Feb. 8 (UPI)—Shops, schools and public offices continued to observe a general strike today as police arrested five persons including a neo-Fascist party official and a wealthy shipowner in connection with a fatal bombing. The general strike kept almost all businesses in the city closed. Only a few banks opened their doors. But no violence was reported. There has been sporadic rioting here for seven months over Rome's decision to name Catanzaro as the new capital of Calabria. Police arrested four persons in Catanzaro in connection with the bomb attack on a leftist march there last Thursday in which one person was killed and 13 injured. One of those arrested was the local Italian Social Movement party secretary, Adelio Balestreri. A short time later, police announced the arrest of shipowner Amedeo Matacena in Reggio on charges of inciting to riot. Last week, before the bomb attack, police arrested one of Italy's richest coffee merchants and three others on other charges stemming from the Calabrian riots. Today's arrests occurred at the victim of the bombing, Giuseppe Matacena, a father of four, was buried in Catanzaro. Police threw up roadblocks to check all persons entering the town.

Party Congress Of Poland Likely To Meet in a Year

WARSAW, Feb. 8 (NYT).—The first indication of when the sixth Communist party congress will meet in the wake of the December riots was given today when a Polish official said the session will probably be held a year from now. He made the comment at a news conference that followed a two-day meeting of the Central Committee that seemed to complete a purge of high party officials, and there were indications that many other changes are likely. The spokesman said that no date was set for the congress, but that it is likely to take place "at the break of 1971-72, and maybe a bit later." He said that there would be many changes in delegates, but that this could be expected after the recent political crisis. He also indicated that some major party assignments may be deferred until the congress meets, including replacements for two Politburo members, Boleslaw Kocicki and Ignacy Lugin-Sewinski, who were ousted during the Central Committee meeting.

U.S. Radio in Berlin Marks 25th Year

WEST BERLIN, Feb. 8 (Reuters).—The American-sponsored radio RIAS, which broadcasts from West Berlin, yesterday celebrated the 25th anniversary of its foundation. President Nixon sent a message of greeting, describing the station as a unique institution and praising its role in Berlin. RIAS-Radio in the American Sector—was set up in 1946 as part of the American effort to counter Communist propaganda. Many of its programs are geared to the East German audience.

Extremists Aim at Jews In Argentina

By David F. Bejap
BUENOS AIRES, Feb. 8.—A rash of urban terrorism in Argentina during the last year included an average of more than one assault a month against Jewish premises, most of them public institutions such as schools, social and cultural centers. The Federation of Argentine Israelite Associations, which keeps careful track of cases of anti-Semitic activity, reported 14 separate incidents of attacks, mostly bombings, during the 12 months beginning February, 1970. These included the most serious single assault against a local Jewish establishment in memory here, the explosion of a sophisticated bomb at the headquarters of the Jewish Community Center in La Plata, capital city of Buenos Aires Province. Two Minor Injuries. The La Plata bombing last May caused $30,000 damage to the Jewish headquarters and lesser harm to neighboring structures, including broken windows as far as a block away. The wife of the building porter and a relative suffered minor cuts. Except for two cases, all of the other bombings involved the flinging of tar bombs against such establishments as the Jewish Community Center in this capital, the offices of a Jewish daily newspaper and the headquarters here of 'Ezra B'ith. The exceptions were a noise bomb set off in the doorway of the headquarters of the Argentine Council of Israeli Women and a bomb placed at the gate leading to the garden of a Jewish school in suburban Ramos Mejia. The latter was the most recent attack, occurring on Dec. 12. Federation officials attribute the physical assaults of the last year to rightist extremists, including remnants of a neo-Nazi terrorist outfit called the Tacara National Movement, which was responsible for the most critical outbreak of anti-Semitic activity in history here in the early 1960s. Tacara later split into leftist and rightist factions, and elements of the rightist splinter, calling itself the Nationalist Restoration Guard, are still active. Leaflets signed by the group were found at the scene of several of the tar bombings. © Los Angeles Times

O. Niemeyer, U.K. Banker, Is Dead at 87

LONDON, Feb. 8 (NYT).—Sir Otto Niemeyer, 87, a former director of the Bank of England, died Saturday at his Sussex home. Otto Ernest Niemeyer, for many years a powerful influence in British and international finance, was born in London and educated at St. Paul's School and Balliol College, Oxford. He took first place in the Civil Service examination of 1906 and entered the Treasury. Sir Otto was appointed controller of finance in 1923. This gave him, before his 40th birthday, responsibility for the technical control of national finance—including the management of the national debt, settlement of war debts and a number of currency matters. In the same year he became a member of the financial committee of the League of Nations. He was named chairman in 1927 and remained a member of the committee for more than 15 years. His move to the Bank of England came in 1927. Sir Otto played a leading role in the bank's efforts to discover whether new financial facilities could revitalize agriculture and the depressed cotton textile industry. Sir Otto in 1931 became a director of the Bank of International Settlements. He served as chairman for three years, starting in 1937, and remained a director until 1955.

Russian Naval Expansion Cited By Douglas-Horne

LONDON, Feb. 8 (UPI).—Sir Alec Douglas-Horne said today the Soviet Union has a "considerable number" of warships in the Indian Ocean. Speaking at a Royal Commonwealth Society lunch, the foreign secretary said, "The Soviet Union's penetration of the Indian Ocean is new. But they already have a considerable number of surface ships together with submarines in the Indian Ocean. They are there all the time in a certain strength." He said that at the recent Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference at Singapore "there was among African members a profound lack of knowledge about the Sino-Soviet agreement." This was an agreement concluded in July, 1955, under which Britain obtained the right to use the Simonstown naval base in return for selling arms to South Africa.

Blasts in Athens Damage U.S. Cars

ATHENS, Feb. 8 (AP).—A new wave of explosions swept surrounding suburbs here early today damaging two cars belonging to members of the American military mission and one to an Australian diplomat. An American Embassy spokesman said that the bombs, of low intensity, damaged cars belonging to a Marine major and an Air Force lieutenant colonel. The Australian car was presumed to have been mistaken for an American one.

Egypt Says Israel Files Suit in Canal

CAIRO, Feb. 8 (AP).—Egypt charges that Israeli troops have been "heping sand dunes into the Suez Canal." According to the Egyptian news agency, this operation began Saturday night on the canal's east bank and the "traces have been blotted out." The agency termed this "proof that Israel wants to hamper the clearing operation of the blocked waterway and its eventual reopening to navigation." Egypt pledged Thursday to reopen the canal if the Israelis carried out a "partial withdrawal" from the canal's east bank.

2 De Gaulle Chapters To Be Published

PARIS, Feb. 8 (AP).—The first two chapters of the book on which former President Charles de Gaulle was working when he died last Nov. 9 will be published next spring, it was reported today. Gen. De Gaulle had already published "The Renewal," the first volume of his work, "Mémoires of Hope." The decision to go ahead with only the first two chapters of the second, all that was finished, was made by his son, Navy Capt. Philippe de Gaulle, and his daughter, Mrs. Alain de Boleslas.

Betty Friedan's Ex-Husband Speaks Out

By Myra MacPherson

'She hates men. Let's face it, they all do—all those activists in the women's lib movement. My thesis is treat them as equals, but, by God, never marry them.'
NEW YORK (WP)—Carl and Betty Friedan were married for 20 years and have the scars to prove it. There is an oversized and severed knuckle on Carl's left ring finger which got that way from stopping a mirror thrown by Betty. And Friedan once threw a sugar bowl at her. Friends set through public as well as private fights. Life with the mother superior of the women's liberation movement and her husband was, as they say in Hollywood, stormy. Breaking a silence he has maintained since their divorce almost two years ago, Friedan blasts out his bitterness about "Life With Betty."
"Betty? She hates men," said Friedan. "Let's face it, they all do—all those activists in the women's lib movement. My thesis is, treat them as equals, but, by God, never marry them. I'm talking about these gung ho, tobacco-chewing types. Fifty to 60 percent are lesbians, either overt or otherwise. I've seen 'em traipse through my living room."
"Why Carl Friedan says he's finding happiness with his new bride of six months, a "close to 40" blonde model, also divorced, who doesn't look as though her idea of recreation is liberating a man's bar. Friedan, who is 51 and an advertising executive, eagerly shows off his new wife's picture to anyone who enters his Madison Avenue office, even though he refuses flatly to have his own picture taken.
"Her Version"
Although Friedan tried to keep the conversation about the feminist movement on a philosophical plane, he constantly reached into his personal experiences and feelings. He says his resentment has grown because of things Betty's been quoted as saying about him since the divorce. She's been quoted as saying that, in order to avoid a fight when she earned more money than he, she would purposely lose her purse, thus not having to bring home her paycheck. To that, he shrugs and says "That's her version."

"Betty said his wife of a wife was one who 'stayed home and cooked and didn't compete.' She had a big success. Carl hated my success and he would throw my schedules, my notes all over the house."
Well, it's round two, and now Friedan is punching.

"I think there's something wrong with a guy who marries this activist type of woman," said Friedan, who freely punts himself in the "activist" category at the time of his first marriage. "A strong man cannot stay married to one. It takes a very placid, weak wimp to be effeminate man to survive with the husband-wife roles reversed—at least the roles we know in our society."
Friedan says he was attracted to Betty for "neurotic needs. I was drawn to her because of my need for psychoanalysis. She was in it and that intrigued me." Friedan, who went through psychoanalysis after their marriage and still goes to group therapy, says "I'm probably the most psychoanalyzed man in New York. When I met Betty I was at a stage when I was very weak. Neurotic, my analyst said. Betty was brought up as a boy by her father. Her mother and my mother were both dominating monsters. Let's face it, I married my mother. I found, the most masculine woman I could."
Betty has said her mother "battered, cut down my father because she had no place to channel her terrific energies." Friedan says it's not true that he hated her success. "The rockiness of their marriage did not escalate because of her success, he says, but because he was working out his own problems. "As I got stronger and stronger, things got stormier and stormier. I just didn't take her crap anymore."
Friedan reserves special anger for the projected image that Betty lived a shackled, hamburger housewife existence and wrote "The Feminine Mystique" as a catharsis. "That's utterly ridiculous. She was in the world during the whole marriage, either full-time or part-time. She felt disappointed then and she still feels disappointed. It's a congenital condition with her."
"I supported 'The Feminine Mystique' for Christ's sake. She had time to write it because she lived in a mansion on the Hudson River, had a full-time maid and was completely supported by me. When the book came out I gave a party for her. He thinks the book, which, ironically, is dedicated to him, is a 'good' book. She's a brilliant writer."
Friedan is a pleasant-faced man of medium height with horn-rimmed glasses, graying long sideburns and sandy and gray hair. He says that he's "lost most of their mutual friends. Most of them stayed with Betty. They like having a name around."

Friedan also scotchs at the idea that women's libbers want to free man, "the fellow victim." From such inequities as alimony. "All those activists, when the chips are down, their principles go right out of the window. Do you know where Betty was at the time of last summer's women's strike she organized? Down to court trying to triple her child support. She took advantage of every law that protects her as a woman in New York State."
The Friedmans have three children: Daniel, 23; Jonathan, 19, and "Sammy," 14. "People wonder how our kids came out so well. They're sensational kids, I think one of the things, as I look back, was we always approved of them. And I was father and mother to them more than once."
New Wife
"Now, I'm delighted with my wife, Norma and I'm encouraging her to have more of a career in modeling. She's charming and loving. She makes chicken soup, and that's love. She shines my shoes sometimes—but I guess you'd better not put that in. My image of a wife is certainly not one who never cooks, never stays home. Betty never washed 106 dishes during 30 years of marriage. This doesn't mean Norma's some nanny-pammy, but she's no intellectual, thank God."
"But then, Betty wasn't all that intellectual. She used to be said Vietnam, but for Christ's sake, she didn't even know where Vietnam was for three years."
Friedan is a pleasant-faced man of medium height with horn-rimmed glasses, graying long sideburns and sandy and gray hair. He says that he's "lost most of their mutual friends. Most of them stayed with Betty. They like having a name around."

A Children's Drugstore Is Opening in Paris

By Naomi Barry

PARIS, Feb. 8.—The Kiddy-Drug opens this morning on the Rue du Colisée, just off the Champs-Élysées. In what is now a familiar setting in Paris, the under-ten crowd can choose toys, gadgets and books in a Lilliputian scaled "drugstore" where the ceiling is plastered with giant posters, the air filled with recorded music and the bar dispenses Coca-Cola and fruit juices. Jean-Pierre Solmand installed clothing shop for small fry, O'Kennedy, in order to "create an environment where his customers would feel at home in a world just like that of Daddy and Mummy." A lot of children regard wardrobe shopping with as much relief as a trip to the dentist. A visit to "an drug," as the French say, promises to be as much fun as an old-fashioned outing to the circus. Mr. Solmand, 34, says "there are three persons who count in my life: Benjamin Spock, Jérôme, and Sandrine." Four and a half years ago, when his son Jérôme was 2, Solmand looked at his own janky clothes and decided "I was dressed like Jérôme's son, and there was Jérôme dressed like an undertaker." He decided then and there to design clothes for French children that would be as contemporary as what their parents were wearing. Jérôme, now 6, and Sandrine, 5, are his guinea pigs. The common sense of Dr. Spock kept him straight on his child psychology, he said. Solmand is a fan of illuminated sturdy cotton fabrics which can be spotted, bright primary colors and gold knickers for small boys. Whereas long trousers often end up at mid-calf within a few months, gold knickers, he observed, "have plenty of future in their bags." Celebrated parents of O'Kennedy customers include Jean Seberg and Romanus Gary, Johnny Halliday and Sylvie Varlan, Sacha Distel, Adamo, Bernard and Annette Buffet. "I have all the children of Yvelin," added Mr. Solmand, citing mothers Annette Stroyberg, Catherine Despreux and Jane Fonda.

Jean-Pierre Solmand and children in the Kiddy-Drug.

His success has just taken him to Japan where he designed a children's collection for the Japanese market only. In Japan, however, he was disappointed to find no toys for his Kiddy-Drug. Spain unexpectedly proved to be a more productive source. There he found small machines which enable children to make their own pop corn and to spin their own cotton candy. Among the gadgets, he is featuring favorite books of his own childhood such as Beatrix and Buster Brown. "Buster Brown is full of astonishing poetry."

N.Y. Entertainment: Berrigan's 'Catonsville Nine'

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—Here's how The New York Times stage and screen critics commented on recent arrivals: "The Trial of the Catonsville Nine," Daniel Berrigan's play, which opened under the auspices of the Phoenix Theater at the Good Shepherd Fifth Church, is a dramatization of the trial of Father Berrigan, his brother, Philip, also a priest, and seven other Catholic radicals who on May 17, 1968, entered a draft office in Catonsville, Md., and destroyed Selective Service records. Critic Elia Kazan of The New York Times wrote of the play: "It is a wonderfully moving testament to nine consciences. It is radical, but not at all chic, and the sincerity of its sentiments reveals the simplicity of men with many years but no dates." The review continues: "Like so many courtroom dramas, it makes a positively riveting play, even though the verdict is a matter of history. The eloquence of the defendants, the cold duty of the prosecution, the dry, unimpassioned of the far from unsympathetic judge, are woven together by Berrigan into a political account of this political act." Gordon Davidson of the Mark Taper Forum in Los Angeles staged the play. Of the actors, The Times reviewer singled out Ed Flanders as Daniel Berrigan, Sam Waterston

Music in London

The Problem With Honegger

By Henry Pleasants
LONDON, Feb. 8.—Arthur Honegger, in his lifetime (1892-1955), was one of the big names of modern music. He is not played much anymore; and something he once said about his approach to composition tells why: "My taste and my effort have always been to write music that would be accessible to the great mass of listeners, and yet sufficiently free of banality to interest the connoisseur." How far he fell short of success on both counts was demonstrated last night in the production of his "Joan of Arc at the Stake" by the London Symphony Orchestra at the Royal Albert Hall. Although it was well attended, if by no means sell-out, it may be assumed that the combination of Miss Farrow as Joan and André Previn as the conductor, rather than Honegger and his finest compositions, was the attraction. And the connoisseurs?

Well, Andrew Porter, in this morning's Financial Times, remembered how he had listened to "Joan of Arc at the Stake" with "rapt attention and admiration" back in 1947 and 1949, and begged to be excused on the grounds that he was only an undergraduate at the time, "who did not know better." William Mann, in the Times, found it "rather old-fashioned," and suggested that it might better be approached as "something like a classical pop opus." All of which helps to show what a composer is up against these days if he tries to please both public and press. He is better off writing for film and theater, where his craft and creativity are needed, where the pay can be good, and where neither film nor music critics will pay any attention to him.

A further irony is that in the very year when Lambert made his president pronouncement, Honegger was at work on "Joan of Arc at the Stake." For it is at once the most ambitious and the most successful of his film scores. All that's missing is the film. If it were made, it would have to begin with Ida Rubinstein commencing it at a dinner "by candlelight at her residence in Paris by the accompanying strains of 19th-century noble music." She was the Joan (a working party of the first performance in Basel in 1928. Then, and ever since, the problem has been how to make do without a picture. One obvious way is to use a film star. In undertaking the role last night Miss Farrow was following in the footsteps of Ingrid Bergman, Constance Cummings, Vera Zorina and many more. Very effectively, too. Clotched in a white shroud, her hair short-bobbed, well lighted, she stood stock still for an hour and a quarter, spoke well, and provided at least a bit of the visual excitement that music both suggests and masks. For the rest, Anthony Busher, the producer, did what could be done with the limitations of singers, actors, chorists, etc., while Mr. Previn went about his work with the atrocious weight of a conductor who knows good film music when he hears it.

TWA: the first airline to fly a scheduled service from Paris to New York.

Midnight, February 6th, a quarter of a century ago.

A TWA Constellation, 'Star of Paris,' rumbles onto the runway at Orly.

The silver wings tremble as Captain H.F. Blackburn revs the engines a moment before releasing the brakes.

There is a hushed excitement in the hearts of thirty passengers.

The first scheduled flight to America lifts off the ground, rises miraculously above the gleaming city, and, in a gesture of friendship, dips its wings to the Eiffel Tower; that earlier, but earthbound, symbol of man's attempt to reach the sky.

The Connie's top speed is 300 mph. Lapsed time to New York, 21 hours and 5 minutes.

Then it was "the most luxurious airliner in the skies."

It is almost certain that no one on board could have envisaged the same trip today in the luxury of a Boeing 747, viewing a colour film* after eating a steak cooked to order.

Then arriving at TWA's ultramodern terminal in New York—with its hydraulic walkways, convenient customs facilities, and moving sidewalks.

Ask any travel agent.

Into Laos

South Vietnamese troops have entered Laos, and the curtain has gone up on another act of the Indochinese tragedy. The incursion followed an overture full of a strange mixture of trumpeting and muted sounds that has few parallels in military history; one of its manifestations was a protest by newsmen in Saigon which would seem to indicate that the role of the press has vastly changed since the first correspondents were grudgingly allowed to mail their dispatches from a battleground. But this last phenomenon is, after all, one-sided; there have been no notable protests to Hanoi, or the Viet Cong, or the Pathet Lao about their reluctance to give full details concerning their operations.

This one-sidedness is, in fact, characteristic of much of the discussion attending the move into Laos. American public figures are, quite naturally, primarily concerned with the American role in the attack on the Ho Chi Minh Trail. But the trail itself has long been taken for granted, like the presence of North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops in "neutral" Cambodia, until Cambodia became less neutral. This is unfortunate, because the trail, and the whole situation in Laos, are evidence of a complexity in Indochinese affairs that has to be taken into account.

Laos had a civil war, in which many of the same assumptions that govern so much of American opinion about South Vietnam were taken as basic. That is to say, a royalist government receiving American support was challenged by a mixture of nationalist and Communist forces—with tacit, but effective, aid from North Vietnam. A political "settlement" was reached, which it was generally (on the American side, resignedly) believed would mean "popular front" control of Laos. But, like their predecessors in Eastern Europe, the nationalists in the government discovered that the Pathet Lao were uneasy bedfellows in politics, and that the North Vietnamese, like the Russians, had no intention of leaving. So the war broke out again—and the North Vietnamese supply line into South Vietnam continued to run through southeastern Laos.

In other words, a political "settlement" proved unworkable with the Communists in Laos, and Hanoi continued to use Laotian territory as its own, compounding its abuse of frontiers by refusing to discuss the subject or admit the fact. Moreover, there is no reason to believe, after Cambodia and Laos, that the Communists are the sole repositories of nationalist sentiment in Indochina, or the Americans the only aliens feared in that region.

This does not affect the argument that it is not the duty, nor in the interest, of the United States to attempt to correct, at great cost in human lives, money and political divisions, the deep-rooted ills of this corner of the world. It does suggest that those ills are not so unilateral as critics of American intervention often proclaim; that Hanoi is not necessarily the home of all the virtues, and Saigon, Phnom Penh and Vientiane the seats of parasitic corruption. Hanoi is not in the business of exporting freedom and national independence to its neighbors. It is shipping out war.

Lunar Adventure

It was a stroke of genius for Alan Shepard to give his "golf" demonstration just before the end of his second day on the lunar surface. The incident provided a moment of playful intellect and emotional contact between the astronauts and millions here on earth to whom the space program's scientific and technical content are largely alien.

For sheer drama, however, nothing in the high adventure of the Antares crew compared to the moment when the two astronauts found themselves lost on the trek to the rim of Cone Crater. Some estimates have it that they were then less than a long city block from their goal. Yet on that eerie, literally unearthly lunar landscape with its deceptive shadows and incredibly tortured topography, the only two men on the moon could not find their way.

Across a quarter of a million miles of space void came the words of their charged debate at one key point. The older astronaut, Shepard, argued for prudence and a turn back toward the lunar module, while his young colleague, Ed Mitchell, urged, "Let's give it a whirl. Gee whiz, we can't stop without looking into Cone Crater." Houston finally ruled in favor of prudence but for a few minutes an argument reminiscent of that between the generations here on earth took place on the moon.

For some, no doubt, the most exciting feature of the day-and-a-half stay on the moon was the high precision of the most important maneuvers. Thus the landing in the rugged Fra Mauro region had been regarded earlier as the supreme test of lunar navigation. In the event Antares landed less than 100 feet from the exact point chosen many months earlier, and after a lift-off with a speed never before known, showing up in the television picture to prepare for docking just when it should have. It is hard to find superlatives adequate to praise the performance of all those who helped make possible this extraordinary precision.

Setback for the OAS

The effort by foreign ministers in Washington last week to devise effective action against political kidnapping in the Americas was a disaster. It produced a walkout, further polarization among countries of this hemisphere and a spate of Yankee-baiting. It raised fresh doubts about the capacity of the Organization of American States to deal with any major problem.

The meeting finally adopted a diluted convention that would deny asylum and provide for the extradition of kidnapers of diplomats. But the convention got only 13 votes, one more than required for adoption. Chile voted against even this mild document on the ground that it would infringe on sovereignty. The left-leaning governments of Peru and Bolivia abstained.

Six other countries with right-wing governments, which had walked out earlier because they wanted a more pervasive convention covering all kinds of terrorism, boycotted the vote. Among them were the two South American giants, Brazil and Argentina, both under army-dominated regimes, both with guerrilla problems.

By an unprecedented 22-to-0 vote, the ministers decided to take time out from debate on kidnapping to hear Ecuador's charge that the United States has violated the OAS charter by suspending arms sales in a dispute over fishing rights. Ecuador subsequently agreed to resume negotiations on the fishing issue, which is what Washington had proposed all along, though Quito also demanded recall of the American military mission there.

So rather than producing a convention that could be a model for regional action outside the Americas, as some diplomats had hoped, the ministers adopted an instrument that is unlikely to make a dent on the kidnapping problem even if it is ratified by enough countries to come into effect. Evidence that the Organization of American States cannot act effectively on this program may even encourage the terrorists.

Heath and South Africa

The upshot of (the British government's) white paper on the Simonstown agreements is that Britain is obliged to sell 11 anti-submarine helicopters to the South African Navy and nothing more.

Mr. Heath need go no further. Throughout the Commonwealth prime ministers' conference he argued repeatedly that Britain had a legal obligation to sell weapons to South Africa. That and the naval threat to the sea routes were his main justifications for taking on a third of the world.

spared much discomfort if its leaders had known that the cause of all their passion was less than half a squadron.

Paragraph four of enclosure one of the agreement for the transfer of the Simonstown naval base says, in effect, that there will be no apartheid on the base. The South African government agreed to it on June 30, 1965, and has since gone back on its word. If Mr. Heath, who truly hates apartheid, wants to be consistent as well as bold, he ought to supply the helicopters only if Mr. Vorster abolishes apartheid in at least one small part of his unhappy country.

Pride and Prejudice

By Anthony Lewis

LONDON.—Judging by the press, Britain's current beau ideal is a 45-year-old Malaysian railway porter.

His name is Yahaya Bahari, and he got here by bicycle. He rode it westward from Malaysia in 1959, across Asia, the Middle East and Europe to England. He is 5 feet 5 inches tall, and he cannot weigh much over 110 pounds.

Bahari entered history the other day when a railway passenger at a London suburban station, Beckenham Hill, dropped an empty cigarette package on the platform as he walked toward the exit. Bahari saw it.

"Pick it up," he shouted. The man kept walking. "Pick it up." Still no reply. Bahari reached into a cupboard and pulled out a small satchel that he uses to trim the grass around the station. He advanced toward the passenger, waving the satchel overhead.

The passenger retreated. Bahari locked the station door. Five minutes later he returned, let the passenger out, picked up the cigarette package himself and put it in the waste bin. The passenger went to the police.

Bahari was charged with possessing an offensive weapon—the satchel. A magistrate found him guilty but let him off on a year's probation after hearing about his work at the Beckenham Hill station.

"I like my station to be clean," Bahari said. "A clean railway means happy passengers, and I like people to be happy." On his pay of $2.90 a week he bought potted plants for the waiting room. He hand-lettered a large timetable, easier to read than British Rail's official version, and posted it on the wall. He polished and swept. He kept a fire going in the waiting room.

He also raised money for charity by installing a swear box into which passengers dropped coins when they swore at late trains. He raised more by collecting silver paper, and he contributed $2.40 a week of his own. He sent Christmas cards to the regular commuters.

After the trial and conviction, British Rail sent Bahari to the station of purgatory—Blackfriars Station, a grimy old hulk on the Thames near Fleet Street in downtown London. "There is no land for growing flowers," Bahari said. "There are no birds that I can feed. There is no happiness coming through here."

But in his exile Bahari found himself a public hero. The Daily Mirror, the tabloid that considers itself the voice of the proletariat, proclaimed in an editorial: "Let him go back to the station of which he was so proud." The right-wing Daily Mail said, "He has a lot to teach us... If roses are blooming on Beckenham Hill, every factory and office in this nation of gardeners ought to be able to afford a daisy or two." In the Listener, the BBC's intellectual weekly magazine, he was called "Hero of the Week." Commenters at Beckenham Hill got up a petition to British Rail to send him back. "The station just won't seem the same," said one of them. Father Brian Stevenson, a Roman Catholic priest, in a few days, more than 1,000 people signed the petition.

Why? What was it about Bahari that caught the public imagination? A week earlier he would have been to most Englishmen, just another of the Asian and West Indian immigrants characterized as "colored"—the men and women who barely enter one's consciousness as bus conductors. No one knows how many voters agree with Enoch Powell that the black and tan population is a menace to English life, but it is enough of an issue so that the Conservative government is about to bring in an even more restrictive immigration law. A future Bahari will have no chance whatever to bicycle into Britain.

The President's decision has been a lonely one, then. If we had given the South Vietnamese enough "assets," they could have done the job entirely on their own. But we failed to do so, so the President has had to decide.

As to the stakes in the game, they can only be described as beyond exact calculation. If the operation has been correctly described, in fact, and above all, if the operation succeeds, the effect on Hanoi's policy and war-making potential can be very easily decisive.

The reasons for this should be obvious to anyone but some U.S. senators and the members of their cliques. Last spring, please remember, the President's brilliant Cambodian gambit cut Hanoi's seaborne supply line, through Sihanoukville, which had long nourished all the enemy forces in the lower two-thirds of North Vietnam.

Now the obvious intent is to cut the other remaining supply line, from North Vietnam down over the Laos trails, and furthermore, to keep this line permanently cut. If this is done, the disaster for Hanoi can be measured by the frenzied efforts Hanoi has been making to build up and to expand the Laos trails' carrying capacity, ever since the Cambodian supply line was lost.

Supply Doubled
In January, for instance, Hanoi moved 8,000 tons of supplies into the Laos trail-pipeline. This was exactly twice the comparable supply movement of January a year ago. This year's manpower movement down the Laos trails is estimated at 50,000 North Vietnamese troops of various types. And this, again, is twice the manpower movement of last year.

The result has been a very large concentration of North Vietnamese in southern Laos and Cambodia. Every one of them is dependent for survival on the Laos trails. The enemy's four divisions in Cambodia find food enough in the countryside, but they cannot really survive as military units without supplies and replacements. The 70,000-plus North Vietnamese soldiers, engineering troops and trail-maintaining coolies in southern Laos, even need truckloads in food for survival. That is why 80 percent of January's 8,000-ton supply movement consisted of truckloads of rice.

In sum, somewhere between 120,000 and 150,000 North Vietnamese are now threatened with the loss of their unique and irreplaceable lifeline. Every one of them is an invader and occupier. Every one of them is where he is today in flagrant violation of Hanoi's most solemn treaty obligations. If those simple facts had been properly responded to four years ago, the war would have been over long since.

The result has been a very large concentration of North Vietnamese in southern Laos and Cambodia. Every one of them is dependent for survival on the Laos trails. The enemy's four divisions in Cambodia find food enough in the countryside, but they cannot really

Bernard Levin From London:

The death-warrant of Rolls-Royce was signed in March, 1968, in the bottom right-hand corner of the last page of a contract with Lockheed. And, in contrast to the usual procedure... this one was signed by the victim.

LONDON.—There is an ancient Jewish joke about two businessmen who meet for the first time in many years. "And what are you doing now?" asks one. "Well," says his friend, "I make pencil-sharpeners and sell them at ten cents each." "Ten cents?" says the first man, "that must cut profit margins pretty fine." "Very" replies the second. "As a matter of fact I lose half a cent on every one I sell." "But if you lose half a cent on every one you sell," asks his bewildered friend, "how do you stay in business?" "Easy," comes the answer. "I sell millions."

It is a week for recalling that story. For if the flaw in the reasoning displayed by the manufacturer of ten-cent pencil-sharpeners is easy to spot, how come the same flaw, on a rather bigger scale, was missed by the people in charge of Rolls-Royce, which went bankrupt last week with the same crash heard on the British industrial or financial scene for something like half a century?

Because that is what it amounts to. When the last ounce of fun has been extracted from the sight of a Conservative government announcing, with faces not so much red as positively magenta, that they were nationalizing one of Britain's most famous firms, after a political lifetime spent denouncing the Socialist case for nationalization as inefficient, wasteful, doctrinaire and unjustifiable, that is what it amounts to—each of the airplane engines to be supplied by Rolls-Royce to Lockheed for the Trident jet would produce for Rolls-Royce a profit of $44,000. Unfortunately, each of the engines would cost $1,100,000 to make. Maybe the company thought that if they sold enough they could show a profit on such figures.

Same Grim Story
Wherever you look at the details, the figures tell the same grim story. The contract with Lockheed was signed in March, 1968. At that time, Rolls-Royce estimated the development costs of the proposed new engine at about $150,000,000. When the crash came last week, they had already spent three times that amount and the end was not yet in sight. Or put it another way: Rolls-Royce committed themselves to producing an engine twice as expensive as any they had ever made before in half the time they had ever taken. It couldn't be done. But the truth, just now coming to light, is worse than that. The truth is that there never was a real test of the ability that it could be done. The death-warrant of Rolls-Royce was signed in March, 1968, in the bottom right-hand corner of the last page of a contract with Lockheed. And, in contrast to the usual procedure throughout history where death-warrants are concerned, this one was signed by the victim. These days, a seven-year-old child doesn't need telling that the production of a great new engineering product, over a period of years, is subject not only to the increases in cost, over the original estimates, inherent in the normal course of inflation. But also, and to a far greater extent, to increases caused by modifications the necessity for which only becomes apparent as the work proceeds. Unfortunately, nobody at Rolls-Royce thought to put a seven-year-old child in charge of the negotiations, for the contract which Rolls-Royce signed allowed for an increase in costs of some 13 percent, and costs in fact increased by some 300 percent. What is more—what is, indeed, everything—any company run by people with the smallest grain of business efficiency would certainly have realized that the margin allowed for was not just too low; it was the wrong order of magnitude, entirely.

The Conclusion?
That what we are to conclude? That Rolls-Royce was run by people who did not have the smallest grain of business efficiency? Yes; that is exactly what, with sadness and anger, the British people are right now concluding. The engineering skill that took Rolls-Royce to the topmost summit of prestige was accompanied by managerial incompetence that summed and down the mountainside.

It is yet another chapter in the story I have had to tell so often. In this column, in the past few years: the story of the suffocating complacency, obstinacy and sheer inability to tell what time of day it is, that rots British industry as a fish rots from the head down. We are in a very bad period of industrial trouble, with a new major strike breaking out, at sometimes seems every day. But if management so often sets the employees such examples of incapacity as Rolls-Royce has just produced, is it any wonder that confidence in their industries is lacking in the labor force, and that the workers conclude they would be best advised to grab what they can while they can get it? I am writing this four days after the crash. So far, I have seen not one public word of apology from the people who ran Rolls-Royce into the ground—not a word of apology to the workers who are going to lose their jobs, to the retired employees or their widows—whom they have ruined through Rolls-Royce shares and will now be lost, to the nation that took justifiable pride in the ancient name of Rolls-Royce, to the government which only last November gave them $150,000,000 of public money to shore them up, no, not even to Lockheed has any public regrets been expressed.

In the wake of the first stunning shock, one theme was to be heard everywhere, from newspaper editorial writers, politicians, commentators, pensive-by-it was to be the effect that Rolls-Royce symbolized everything that we had come to think of as typical of British industry. The most horrible thing about that claim is that it now seems to have been true.

There's a Long, Long Trail

By Joseph Alsop

WASHINGTON.—Anyone with on-the-spot knowledge of the all-ed high commands in Saigon can figure out the cause of all the recent commotion. If it goes well, the South Vietnamese are going to do what the Americans and South Vietnamese ought to have done four years and more ago.

In other words, South Vietnamese troops are going to try to cut the Laos trails near their point of origin, in the area of mountains and deep valleys across the Laos border from the Khe Sanh Plateau. An air bridgehead will obviously have to be established inside eastern Laos, to insure supply and local air support. This will also be needed as an anchor position, from which to conduct operations against the Laos trails themselves.

The American role will be precisely what it has been in Cambodia since our ground troops withdrew from the sanctuaries. In other words, primarily because we have not given the South Vietnamese enough "assets" of their own, U.S. tactical aircraft, some helicopters, and probably some transport aircraft, will be used to support the South Vietnamese forces on the ground.

If this is what in fact has been under preparation, it speaks volumes about the cool courage of President Nixon. To begin with, there is always an inherent risk in any such military operation. In recent months, to be sure, the North Vietnamese have regularly run away, or have been heavily defeated, whenever the South Vietnamese forces have taken the offensive. Yet the risk is still there, and it is real.

An Eye on Fulbright

A good many members of the President's own administration are more worried about upsetting Sen. J. William Fulbright than they are concerned about the great interests of the United States. And Sen. Fulbright and many of his colleagues, in turn, are downright eager to be proved right by an American defeat in war, and will leathe being proved wrong by U.S. success in Southeast Asia.

As to the stakes in the game, they can only be described as beyond exact calculation. If the operation has been correctly described, in fact, and above all, if the operation succeeds, the effect on Hanoi's policy and war-making potential can be very easily decisive.

Now the obvious intent is to cut the other remaining supply line, from North Vietnam down over the Laos trails, and furthermore, to keep this line permanently cut. BURY MY HEART AT WOUNDED-KNEE
An Indian History of the American West
By Dee Brown, Holt, Rinehart and Winston. Illustrated. 487 pp. $10.95.

Reviewed by Thomas Lask
WHAT have we done that the American people want us to stop? Sitting Bull asked...

Perhaps what is most painful in these records is the self-serving ploy in the statements of the white men, missionaries, liberals, do-gooders, all of whom were going to raise the heathen Indian to their level...

The book does not speak for all Indians, not for the Pawnee, nor for those who worked out a way of life with the whites...

BRIDGE

Skilful play after good bids overcame a 5-0 trump split on the diagrammed deal. South made a slightly eccentric opening bid of one heart...

According to unofficial clockings, Switzerland's Andreas Sprecher was the fastest in 1:54.6.

Marv Hodler, president of the FIS, said the splintered team of the FIS...

"I would say that he was rather unhappy about it," Hodler said. "He was unhappy because of lack of snow and lack of safety measures."

The men's downhill is the second Alpine event at the pre-Olympic. The girls staged their downhill yesterday with France's Annie Famose winning.

The 70-meter jump drew today's largest crowd. The jumps had been expected to be a battle among Ingolf Mork of Norway, Jiri Raska of Czechoslovakia and Gari Napalov and Vladimir Belousov of Russia.

But Mork lost out when he fell after jumping 88 meters in the first series and wound up in seventh place. Raska finished fifth and Mork was second.

Anatoli Zheglov of the Soviet Union was second with jumps of 84 and 78 meters for a total of 240.1 points.

Manfred Wolf of East Germany jumped 83 and 80.5 meters for a total of 238.7 and third place. Fourth place went to Heinz Schmitz of East Germany with 82 and 78-meter jumps for 233.1 points.

The triumph ended a five-game winless streak for Detroit, while California was suffering its fifth straight defeat.

California scored first when Billy Elicke converted a pass from Ted Hampton at 2:12 of the opening period. The Wings tied the score less than two minutes later when Alex Delvecchio connected for his 13th goal at 3:53.

Detroit broke the game apart in the middle session with goals by rookie Tom Webster, his 20th, at 4:21. Elicke's first score at 10:47 and Nick Libeh's ninth of the season at 12:13.

HOW SHARPER than a serpent's tooth is George Thomas Seaver, and how right. With the ink still wet on a contract promising him $85,000 or $90,000 for a summer on the playgrounds, he puts the slug on baseball's reserve system and the game's employer-employee relations.

According to an interview published in the New York Daily News, the economic royalist of the New York Mets' pitching staff feels that baseball's labor relations are "as bad as they ever have been."

For the first time in three years there will be no atmosphere of impending crisis when training camps open this month. Two years ago the players boycotted the camps until they won improvements in their pension plan.

This year there is no issue calling for a showdown. So the owners are creating one by stubbornly refusing to give the players a voice in the bargaining for new network television contracts.

The interview with Seaver made no reference to these matters, though the pitcher is aware of the opinion being ignored? Asked that "inconsistent with your overall view?" "Kuhn: Sometimes we must go against public opinion when public opinion is not wise. We cannot do that regularly, however."

Good Humor Man The Olympian attitude of the baseball hierarchy is reflected in the report of a discussion Kuhn had with the players' executive board in December, 1969. It could serve as an appendix in Flood's forthcoming book. Here's a sample: "Tom Haller: Mr. Kuhn, you talk about the importance of public opinion. I'm sure you're familiar with our poll of sportswriters concerning the length of the season, and that over 95 percent said it was too long. When you refuse to consider their feelings, you're inconsistent with your overall view?"

The same shallow cynicism governs baseball's approach to labor relations. No matter how lofty the principle involved, the typical ally always has the same solution: "Give 'em a little more money and they'll shut up." Hence the unimpressive comment in St. Louis when Curt Flood, the portrait painter, first

WASHINGTON — Everyone seems to have his own theory as to how we can get out of Vietnam. Many critics are questioning President Nixon's strategy of winding down the war by enlarging it.

Buchwald

Prof. Heinrich Appelbaum, who works at the Institute for the Study of Undeclared Wars, has been highly skeptical of the President's secret plan to get us out of Vietnam. "Nixon's big mistake," said Appelbaum, "is that he's withdrawing the wrong troops."

Appelbaum wrote on the blackboard. "For each fighting GI the President pulls out, he leaves behind nine soldiers who are not equipped to defend themselves. When the President justifies all the things he's doing to protect American lives, he is really talking about the support troops who are expected to remain in Vietnam after the fighting troops are pulled out."

"What's the solution?" "Well," said Appelbaum, "once again the President has all his priorities fouled up. If he really wanted to pull our American troops out of Vietnam, he would withdraw the support troops first and the fighting men last."

"But that would mean closing the PXs and the officers' clubs," I protested. "Right on," he replied. "The sooner we close the PXs, officers' club, movie theaters and public-relations offices, the sooner all our troops will be forced to go to Vietnam. No American army can remain anywhere without the amenities of life."

Foreign Press Gives 5 Awards To 'Love Story'

HOLLYWOOD, Feb. 8 (Reuters). — "Love Story" won five Golden Globe awards at the Hollywood Foreign Press Association's awards ceremony. However, the best dramatic actor award went to George C. Scott for "Patton."

"It makes sense on your blackboard," I said. "It's the only solution," Appelbaum said. "Close more combat troops Nixon withdraws the more danger there is to the noncombat troops, and eventually the President will have to do something very stupid to fulfill his promise of protecting American boys."

From "The Art of Maya Hieroglyphic Writing."

The Stubborn Maya Mystery

By Karl E. Meyer

NEW YORK (WPI)—It is not large, it is not flashy, and its subject may seem an eccentric specialty, but an exhibition called "The Art of Maya Hieroglyphic Writing" looks suspiciously like that rare thing—a genuine intellectual event.

The aim of the show is to call attention to the most ambitious attempt yet to solve a stubborn riddle: The deciphering of the only form of writing developed in the New World before Columbus.

All of the key materials about the beautiful and bizarre Maya script are gathered in the spacious ground floor of the mansion that used to house the Soviet mission to the United Nations. The building is now the headquarters of the Center for Inter-American Relations.

was called in November, 1967, at the foundation's offices in New York. Present were representatives of the Center of Inter-American Relations, Harvard's Peabody Museum, the American Museum of Natural History and Yale's anthropology department.

It was agreed that the first vital step to decipherment had to be a comprehensive publication of the 1,322 inscribed stones known to exist, most of them in the jungles and scrub of Mexico, Guatemala and Honduras. Additionally, the corpus will include the three surviving Maya books, or codices, that escaped the flames of the Spanish friars determined to eradicate heathen relics.

First Step

Such was the genesis of the Maya Hieroglyphic Inscription Study, a 15-year project which will cost an estimated $500,000. The Gutman Foundation will bear part of the cost. The research is being conducted by the Peabody Museum, and is under the direction of Ian Graham, a British scholar and explorer. Mr. Graham, who prepared the New York show—and wrote the admirable catalog for it—lives in Guatemala, where he has already discovered a number of major unknown Maya sites.

PEOPLE: 'Time to Join The Real World'

Cary Grant

He's silver-haired now and 67, and his only aim in life is to have his six-year-old daughter grow up to "love someone and be loved." So says Cary Grant in his current story on Archie Leach, of Bristol, England, better known as Cary Grant. Turning down movie and television offers that "start at one million dollars," Grant says, "I have retired from the acting profession and I have driven the ladies crazy by selling them dresses from the firm of Fabergé, while he moonlights as a member of the board of directors of Western Airlines."

Speaking of Jennifer, his daughter by actress Dyan Cannon, Grant told the magazine: "I am not proud of my marriage record (I was divorced four times) but I have wanted a family for years. I finally have one in this child. I will do what I can for her. I want Jennifer to give me man love and confidence and help. It has taken me many years to learn that I was playing a different game entirely. My wives and I were never one. We were competing. I will advise Jennifer to love someone she may get in her life as a bonus."

Also climbing off the celluloid, but in favor of the legitimate stage in this instance, is Lana Turner, who says she is going on the boards for the first time in her 33-year acting career because "the movie business is in terrible shape." The original "Sweater Girl" who has signed for a ten-week summer tour of the Broadway hit "Forty Carats" because "I like to keep busy," told an interviewer: "The film scripts I get nowadays you wouldn't believe. I'm going to the states and I know how repulsive they are."

UNDER TREATMENT: French musician Fernand St. for arthritis of the hip which has been complicated by a respiratory infection. He contracted it while playing "Don Camillo" in Italy. RESCUED: Romantic Britons who feared their valentines might not be delivered because of the mail strike, by Miss Hanson, a BBC broadcaster. Miss Hanson, a 21-year-old blonde, will take to the microphone next Monday to read as many Valentine's Day messages as possible over the air, accompanied by music the BBC promises will be "suitably smoochy." SUE'D: The Supreme and Berry Gordy for president of Motown Records Corp., for $8.7 million, by Florence Ballard, one of the original members of the singing trio, who charges that they "secretly, subversively and maliciously conspired to oust her from the group. Miss Ballard—repaired by Cindy Shegog—alleges that Gordy and Ballard stole her former lead singer of the trio, told her in 1967 that her singing was deteriorating and that she was hurting the group. Since leaving the Supremes, founded by Gordy in 1961, Miss Ballard's suit alleges that she has changed from a person with a very congenial nature to one who is "extremely nervous and highly irritable."

Princess Anne, in the third day of a two-week tour of Kenya with Prince Charles, yesterday said a girl named Maryanne, a 17-year-old Kenyan, was the daughter of President Jomo Kenyatta, and presented her with an autographed picture. "Oh, is this your mother?" asked the mayor. "No, I'm afraid it's me," replied Anne. (Miss Kenyatta, 47, reports, recovered quickly enough to take a closer look at the photo and name, of course, it's very like you.")
